What is Management?

Most textbooks describes management as:

- Planning,
- Organizing,
- Staffing,
- Directing,
- Coordinating,
- Reporting, and
- Controlling.

Is this all about management?

- No, the real world, however, is far from being that simple.
- The world in which most managers work is a messy and hectic stream of ongoing activities.

What Do Managers Do?

Managers are doing constant actions such as:

- Giving orders
- Asserting authority
- Develop relationships
- Gathering information
- Staying on top of things
- Identifying problems
- Negotiating shared meanings
- Developing plans
- Putting things in motion

What Roles do Managers Play in Organization?

What responsibilities do managers have in organizations?

- Long-range planning. Managers occupying executive positions are frequently involved in strategic planning and development.
- Controlling. Managers evaluate and take corrective action concerning the allocation and use of human, financial, and material resources.
- Environmental scanning. Managers must continually watch for changes in the business environment and monitor business indicators such as returns on equity or investment, economic indicators, business cycles, and so forth.

What responsibilities do managers have in organizations?

- Supervision. Managers continually oversee the work of their subordinates.
- Coordinating. Managers often must coordinate the work of others both inside the work unit and out.
- Customer relations and marketing. Certain managers are involved in direct contact with customers and potential customers.

What responsibilities do managers have in organizations?

- Community relations. Contact must be maintained and nurtured with representatives from various constituencies outside the company, including state and federal agencies, local civic groups, and suppliers.
- Internal consulting. Some managers make use of their technical expertise to solve internal problems, acting as inside consultants for organizational change and development.
- Monitoring products and services. Managers get involved in planning, scheduling, and monitoring the design, development, production, and delivery of the organization's products and services.

What are the different levels of management?

We can distinguish three general levels of management:

- Executives management: Responsible for the entire organization, especially its strategic direction.
- Middle management: Responsible for major departments and may supervise other lower level managers.
- First-line management: Supervise rank-and-file employees and carry out day-to-day activities within departments.

Shape of Levels in the Management Hierarchy

What managerial skills are required for each level of management?

We can distinguish three types of managerial skills:

- Technical skills. Refers to the ability to use the tools, procedures, and techniques. An accountant must have expertise in accounting principles, whereas a production manager must know operations management.
- Human relations skills. Human relations skills involve the ability to work with people and understand employee motivation and group processes. These skills allow the manager to become involved with and lead his group.

What managerial skills are required for each level of management?

- Conceptual skills. These skills represent the ability to organize and analyze information in order to improve organizational performance.
- ✓ They include the ability to see the organization as a whole and to understand how various parts fit together to work as an integrated unit.
- ✓ These skills are required to coordinate the departments and divisions successfully so that the entire organization can pull together.
